Guide me in the path of duty, From it never let me stray; When I wander into darkness,

Gently lead me back to day. When in weakness I am straying In the worldly paths of sin, Let Tny mercy still o'ershade me, And my erring spirit win.

Oh, forgive me, if in blindness
I Thy blest commandments break;
Shed Thy glorious light around me,
Bid my sleeping soul awake.

Saviour, help me when I struggle With temptations, great and small; Give me strength to meet the dangers, Never let me flee or fall. When the rays of peace and pleasure,

Crown my earthly, fleeting days, Let me ne'er forget their Giver, Let me render Him the praise. Keep me while through life I journey, Bear me o'er death's rolling tide,

Monopoly's Ten Commandments. Monopoly spoke these words to labor, saying:

1. I am thy landlord and boss. I own the land, water, air, light and heat, the telegraph lines, mines, rail-roads, telephones, and all labor sav-ing machinery. I have secured all this capital from your labor in order ity.

2. Thou shalt make no image of any labor agitator or join any labor organization that questions my power or authority, or I shall withdraw my capital from business and you shall die the death. 3. Thou shalt bow down before me and worship me, and take what-ever wages I choose to give thee, for thou wert born inferior to me, with saddle on thy back and bit in thy mouth for me to ride and guide at will, and any refractory movement on thy part will be met with a jog from the spurs that nature put on my

4. Thou shalt ever obey me, for I am a fierce and jealous master, and shall visit the sins of the parents upon their children, to the fourteenth generation, by blacklisting them that oppose me. 5. Thou shalt always speak well of me. Woe unto him who dares to profane my name. 6. Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day, and let all thine actions and thoughts be devoted to my interests and profits. Six days shalt thou have a slight interest in the results of thy labor. On the seventhall thy work shall redound to my glory and emoluments, and woe to him who dares to raise his voice against me on that day.

8. Thou shalt not kill me nor steal any of my property, either by a judicious use of the ballot, or by engaging in co-operation, or by boylandlord and master, and he who engages in them will not be held guilt-

nor listen to the Knights of Labor, or other heretics, and if thou art called into court and I am interested thou shalt perjure thyself and great shall be thy reward.

10. Thou shalt not covet my wife and woe to the coachman who elopes with my daughter. Thou shalt also be careful not to covet my lands or franchise or frame any laws to deprive me of my plunder, and the hours of thy labor shall be long and I shall smile upon thee .- Ex.
